

AGUAJE

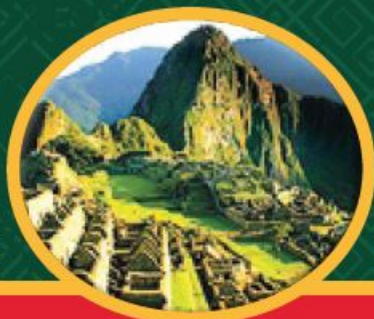

Mauritia flexuosa

Known in Brazil as "buriti," the aguaje fruit comes from the moriche palm tree in the marshes and wetlands of the Amazon rainforest. The palm tree grows over 100 feet high and its red, scaly fruit has yellow flesh and a large pit. In Peru, aguaje is typically used to make juice or popsicles and is believed to enhance women's natural curves and libido.

Three percent of Peruvian Naturals earnings are donated to small farms and agricultural businesses in rural Peru.
