Shilajit (Sanskrit: शिलाजीत, in Farsi or Dari, šilājatu, سلاجیت in Urdu) or Mumijo is a black exudate from high mountain rocks, often found in the Himalayas, Karakoram, Nepal, Girda (India), Russia, Mongolia. The English word Shilajit is a phonetic adaptation of "šilājīt" (Hindi: शिलाजीत), which in turn goes back to Sanskrit (Sanskrit: शिलाजित्, šilājatu). The literal meaning of the Sanskrit compound is "mountain tar", the first element शिला (šilā) meaning "pertaining to, or having the properties of a rock, mountain", the second जित् (jatu) denoting "gum, lac; any tarry substance".

When planet Earth was called Pangea, when dinosaurs were dominant animals on a ground and pterodactyls having air space, in a time standing 240- 64 million years apart from now also known as the Mesozoic Era, a prehistoric plan looking similar to a modern giant cactus been growing happily ever after in jungles. Dramatically different from current climate conditions, sun radiation amount glazing Pangea surface, atmosphere content and soil minerals - were those factors upon the cactus enjoyed its life on a land currently known as Tibet, India, and Altai, Mongolia Mountains.
