Replenishing your omega-3 essential fatty acids is an important step in maintaining good health after the birth of your child. It is especially important for mothers who have experienced, or are planning for, multiple pregnancies, or who are nursing.
Omega-3 DHA is a major structural component of the brain and nervous system, supporting a mother's memory and cognition, and her infant's development.* DHA levels in mothers' breast milk can decline by up to half in the first month of her child's life.* Supplementing with DHA can help support higher levels of DHA during breastfeeding.*
