

A Marvel of Science!

Medical researchers have long known that stress and injury can alter cell metabolism and weaken immune system regulation, leading to serious health complications. Nobel Prize laureate, Dr. Albert Szent-Gyorgyi, published research in the 1980s showing that compounds found in very minute quantities in wheat germ could help restore healthy cell metabolic function.* Fermented Wheat Germ Extract (FWGE) was created when a process was developed to concentrate these compounds by fermenting wheat germ by baker's yeast.

The "BioActive Fraction"

Extensive research on FWGE drew the attention of scientists at a leading NCI-designated academic research center. They invited American BioSciences® to join a research collaboration to identify the individual molecules in FWGE that account for its biological activity, and find the "bioactive fraction". This research collaboration determined:

- In its natural form FWGE consists of thousands of molecules, but 100% of the biological activity and health benefits are provided by less than 100 molecules which compose the "bioactive fraction."
- Non-active molecules dilute FWGE bioactives and they include gluten and gliadin which may contribute to unwanted inflammation.

American BioSciences developed a patent pending combination of technologies used in food processing which concentrates the "bioactive fraction," referred to as FWGE-SC™ (Fermented Wheat Germ Extract-Super Concentrate). Non-active molecules, including gluten, are excluded. Studies show that 41 mg of FWGE-SC has the same biological effect as 5,500 mg of pure FWGE.
