

Chlorella is a single-celled, freshwater green algae that is one of the richest known sources of chlorophyll, which is responsible for its deep green color. The high chlorophyll content of chlorella supports oxygenation of our blood and consequent energy production in all our cells, allowing cells to release toxins more effectively. Chlorella truly shines in its ability to promote detoxification. Chlorella's fibrous cell wall binds with heavy metals, radioactive isotopes, pesticides such as PCBs and DDT, and other toxins to help carry them out of the body.*

Perhaps the most important nutritional aspect of chlorella stems from the presence of a phytonutrient known as Chlorella Growth Factor. This water-soluble compound is only found in chlorella and is responsible for the remarkable ability of this plant to quadruple itself every 20 to 24 hours under favorable conditions.

- supports cellular repair*
- supports cellular detoxification*
- promotes optimal immune function*
- supports growth of beneficial intestinal bacteria*
- supports free radical neutralization*
- supports oxygen utilization efficiency in cells and thus may improve exercise performance and stamina*
